Comments to the Submitting Author

The authors aiming to determine and to investigate the KAP and predictors of CAM usage in diabetic patients in Indonesia

Title: The title is partially adequate reflecting content of the study.

2. Abstract: The abstract is adequate

The aim, results and conclusion not clearly presented

3. Introduction: The introduction is adequate.

4. Materials and Methods:

This observational, cross-sectional study involved 628 type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) patients. Patients were interviewed via questionnaires. A Chi-square analysis was used to differentiate the demographical, clinical data, and KAP assessments in T2DM patients between CAM users and non-CAM users. Multivariate logistic regression analyses were used to investigate predictors of CAM usage in T2DM patients

a. Study design: observational, cross-sectional study, Age groups can be less than 50 years. Religion Muslim 98% and other 2%. either merge all religion or remove other religion.

b. Sampling technique: It has NOT been adequately described, convenient sample method used

c. Recruitment of Subjects: It has been described adequately

d. Study duration: Study period and dates provided. August and November 2020

e. Setting: It has been described adequately in Indonesia

f. Eligibility criteria; It has been reported adequately

g. Data collection and measurements: Data collection tool and analysis described in very detail.

h- Statistical analysis: Simple descriptive and multivariate statistical analysis presented.

h. Ethical consideration: The Ethical committee approval has been provided

5.Results:

Table 1 and Table 4 can be merged as one table CAM and Non-CAM

The results text can be decreased by 50%

The most commonly used CAM therapies are herbs, spiritual healing, and massage. The four factors which were found to be predictors of CAM usage in Indonesian DM patients are as follows: CAM products are easily available and inexpensive (OR= 4.59, 95% CI=3.01–7.01), CAM products are safe (OR=2.03, 95% CI =1.40–2.95), CAM products can help with diabetes control (OR=1.75, 95% CI=1.15–3.00), and CAM products can maintain physical health (OR=1.68, 95% CI=1.13–2.49).

6. Discussion: The discussion is well and concise written but, authors should remove unnecessary discussion text by 50%.

7. Contribution to the literature: The authors should provide key points and the contribution of current study to literature and what messages are provided with the present study?.

8. Limitations: The authors should report some of the key limitations of this study, which not mentioned randomization.

The authors should report that results obtained can NOT be generalized to all individuals in Indonesia.

Conclusions: The study suggest that the CAM usage in T2DM patients in Indonesia is associated with the beliefs that CAM products are affordable and accessible, safe, and effective in controlling blood glucose and maintaining physical health, rather than with any demographic or clinical characteristics.

Overall, this study addresses an important public health issue well written and presented.. It seems subjects participants are non-randomly selected which subject and conclusion might be considered as a bias. The authors should provide key points and the contribution of current study to literature and what messages are provided with the present study? The authors should report some of the key limitations of this study in detailed. I think the major concern of this submission is it lacks sufficient novelty and or original study. Although, the study does not contribute novel knowledge or add sufficiently to the current literature, but, it would help local policy makers.

Comments to the Submitting Author

Thank you for conducting this interesting paper "Complementary and alternative medicine use among diabetic patients in Indonesia: Knowledge, attitude, practice, and predictors".

there are some issues could be more well developed as follows.

1. Introduction: It may be helpful if the authors can add some details about factors associated with CAM use among patients with type 2 DM based on literature review. Then you may point out what factors you want to focus in this study and why? As well as research hypotheses based on the literature review.

2. Discussion: The authors explained deeply about factors associated with CAM use. However, more explanations are needed for KAP findings.

3. Conclusion: Please give readers more details about how to apply the findings of this study into clinical practices.

Comments to the Submitting Author

1. I recommend that the data in Tables 1 and 2 should be compared between the groups. Do they have any difference between the two groups? The author did not clarify.
2. The OR value in Table 4 has some error. For example, for variable "gender", OR=0.05, BUT 95%CI of OR: 0.99-2.12. The OR value (0.05) didn't in the range of 95%CI. The authors should check all the data in this manuscript.
