Technical Comments:

Editor Comments:

We operate a transparent peer review process for this journal where reviewer reports are published with the article but the reviewers are not named (unless they opt in to include their name).

Reviewer reports:

Reviewer 1: This article is well-written. My suggestions are as follows:

1. Statistical analysis

The knowledge and attitude would be the factors that influencing the performance of gatekeeper role. Suggest to include knowledge and attitude into the models of performance. Performance would be the outcome of interest for this study.

2. Please have a section of recommendations that is based on the results findings.

3. conclusions and policy implications

some of the suggestions were not supported or suggested by the results (eg suggestion of group practice and education of public).

Reviewer 2: An interesting manuscript that focuses on the gate keeper role of general practitioners which is more important than ever during the Universal Health Coverage era.

Some points for clarification:

- The methods section does not seem to explain when the data collection was conducted.
 - A justification on how the methodology of selecting the 96 GPs as the target sample from 365 GPs would be useful.
 - In conducting the validation of the self-developed questionnaire, 20 participants were sampled. Kindly provide a reference on why this number was selected and not the common 30 participants.
 - Non-parametric testing was pre-specified for all measures. Kindly expand on whether all measures do not have a normal distribution.
- Qualitative analysis could be a recommendation for future studies to find out the why for these results. As it is certainly interesting to see that while Knowledge and Practice seems to be adequate, Attitudes are not.

Reviewer 3: The research is very important for the readers to understand the primary care gatekeeper role in Indonesia. But there are some design flaws in this study:

1. The study participant is not very clear, "physician in charge" (clinical director) or other GPs who work at the same facility to participate in the survey? Why the clinical director's colleagues of the same facility were invited? Were the 73 respondents from 73 primary care facilities all clinical directors?
2. The reliability and validity of questionnaires are very important for investigation. In this study only 20 respondents were included to test the reliability and validity and the sample is too small. Cronbach's alpha of each questionnaire domain was below 0.7. The low reliability indicates that if such a questionnaire is used for measurement, the results may be unreliable.

The authors should make clear whether KAP about the primary care gatekeeper role should be measured at the institutional level or at the GP individual level. On this basis, the items in each domain should be developed. As the previous reviewer questioned the suitability of some items as GP individual level, the author did not give a convincing reason in the revised manuscript. In addition, to test the reliability and validity of the questionnaire, more participants should be included.
